

Election Update June 2016

Trump supporters scare not only Democrats but principled Republicans who have been openly critical of Trump's misogynistic, xenophobic, narcissistic and racist comments. Republican leadership is clearly concerned about Trump being completely uninformed about domestic and international affairs, also frightening our allies who support and respect America's historical leadership in the world.

Empty rhetoric by Trump claiming: I am the least racist, I respect women more than anyone else, I will bring back jobs, "America first" or "Make America Great Again"; without any policies or demonstrable plans are hard to take seriously as hard as you may wish it could be possible. Using the internet as your source for foreign and domestic policy while rejecting expert military advice, claiming you are much smarter than the experts about the military and the economy should scare even the most ill-informed amongst us.

Sanders may be a cranky curmudgeon, misleading the youth into believing there is such a thing as FREE, at least he has some valid and acceptable policies. Hillary, who has weathered three decades of hate and misinformation may not be the most lovable candidate, but at least she has valid policies that will improve the lives of the average citizen and her political stance is respected world-wide as responsible and reasonable. Hillary's life long struggle to improve the lives of the less fortunate and seeking justice and equality not only for minorities but the women of the world, should make her the obvious choice to lead the free world and make the world a much, much better place in our lifetime.
